ADDITIONAL RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, PADepartment of Linguistics, Graduate Research Assistant

- Dan Villarreal (Summer 2022): We used various configurations of random forest classifiers to auto-code tokens of English post-vocalic /r/ in sociolinguistic interviews. Measures of artificial intelligence fairness and their relation to race were also considered. Project supported by a Pitt Momentum Funds Seeding Grant.

- Melinda Fricke (Summer 2021, 2022, 2023): We created an online map task to study written English-Spanish codeswitching. Responsibilities included task design, data collection, and linguistic processing using NLP techniques (e.g., tokenization, parsing, and annotation). Project supported by NSF CISE grant #IIS-2007656.
- Amanda Huensch (Summer 2021): We analyzed dimensions of L2 speech (e.g., comprehensibility) in English-Spanish bilinguals. Tasks included intelligibility coding, syllable counting, and processing of speech files using CLAN and Praat.
